word in a series of negative commands of old age: Keep/Off, No/Tres pas/sing, Forbid/den Stop/Must/n't Don't Don't. Parentheses are usually used to flank additional or somewhat foreign information that is not important for the main meaning of a sentence; in old age sticks, however, cummings uses parentheses to separate age-related parts from those about adolescence. Both sets of information are essential to the meaning of poetry. Cummings also puts or spaces words in a very unconventional way, such as when teenagers interrupt old age: No / Tres)& (fitting) / youth laugh / (singing). The presence of all these devices may be confusing for readers who aren't used to such oddities, so cummings provides some help to understand poetry - he creates his own rules. For example, each of the five stanzas contains eight syllables arranged in four lines: 3-2-1-2. This setting provides the structure of the poem and the level of prediction. Cummings consistently uses ampersand rather than words and. Also, as we've seen, he's really organized in the way he uses parentheses and capital. All the devices Cummings uses add meaning to poetry, thus conveying more than just dictionary definitions of his words. In episodes of old age sticks, the words carry the usual meaning, but they also bring additional significance. This poem is more than just a battle between adolescence and old age. Adolescent interdependence and old age and life cycle themes are fully conveyed through Cummings's poetic device. The words themselves say nothing about this subject. Through the selection, arrangement, and application of skilled words, symbols, and techniques, Cummings is able to make old age sticks mean more than he says. EXAMPLE: line 2 says Up Keep si this says that the old take care of the youth but the line 2-4 combined says keep these signs show how old people is soaring youthTili which confuses me admit it BUT if you read it again and again and pay close attention to ounctuation and grouping of words it really means a different thing than if you just like a newspaper article well I think it was to read one of his last poems, I'm not sure though Students: We have a free audio pronunciation exercise.
